The Penn Bioethics Journal is intended as a forum for undergraduate researchers to communicate their results to their peer community, and to give these authors experience in creating and submitting scientific manuscripts. The Penn Bioethics Journal reserves the right to publish submitted papers in both print and electronic form. Authors of such papers retain the right to publish or present any or all of the research comprising the paper in other fora or scientific journals. Authors should be aware that some scientific journals require exclusive rights to publish research, and are advised to investigate the conditions imposed by any other journals in which they may wish to publish. The Penn Bioethics Journal will not publish manuscripts without receiving this form signed by all authors of the manuscript and the supervisor or mentor of those authors.

Authors

By signing this agreement, the author or authors agree to the above terms, and assert that all original data in their manuscript is accurate and authentic.
